

Glomalin in its natural state is brown. A laboratory procedure reveals glomalin on soil aggregates as the green material shown here.

Fungal Hyphae & Spore

Glomalin is very stable, glycoprotein, that stores carbon in the soil as a glue and protects the soil biota.

It makes up a large amount of soil organic matter and a portion is reactive carbon.